Searching for Sustainable Funding to Prevent Future Health Care Costs

For decades we have acknowledged that clinical care accounts for only 10 to 15% of health status. Despite an intellectual awareness of this fact, our healthcare financing mechanisms are reluctant to invest today's healthcare dollar in order to realize a return on investment 40 to 60 years in the future. Consequently, we keep investing more in health care treatment, leaving the United States with the highest per capita healthcare costs in the world - but far from the best healthcare status. The Michigan Health Policy Forum will explore the role that social determinants of health and adverse childhood events (ACEs) play in the healthcare status of our state and examine the health status of Michigan's children today. A panel discussion will address how the health financing system is or could be supporting efforts to provide Michigan's children with the "resilience" required to stave off negative health consequences and raise the question of how best to structure financing for non-clinical interventions.
